I do not feel myself at all constrained to enter into any controversy as to the general principle upon which this, as well as every other proposal of appropriation, rests. We make no secret of that professing principle - we avow at once that it is our intention to act upon it; and whether the burden, which it has been both graphically and rhetorically represented to entail upon us, be light or heavy, at least we make no complaint of it, and it has not yet broken our backs. It is, then, neither the arraignment of our motives nor the denunciation of our principle which I feel to affect or concern me at the present moment; I have merely to deal with the objections which have been made to the machinery and practical operation of the Bill I have had the honour to introduce to the House. I will not even suffer myself to be diverted from this track, in order to follow the Honourable Member who spoke last into the disquisition which his researches into historical lore have enabled him to make as to the antiquity...
