Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Duke School of Religion Bulletin, Vol. 3 The Palestine Report will rank among the great State papers of our time. Its proposals are a profound disappointment to many; but no one can question the honesty and courage with which the Royal Commission have gone about their task, or the ability with which they have presented their case. * This quotation from the New Statesman and Nation is repeated in Current History for September 1937; it bears another repetition here. Seldom indeed does British officialdom publish plain facts, containing an admission of failure, for all the world to read. I had originally intended to write about The Present Situation in Palestine ; but after realizing that it has been more than two years since I left the unfortunate Holy Land, I deemed it safer to comment on the Royal Commission s Report and current newspaper dispatches, instead of trying to guess what people in Palestine are saying and thinking at the moment. Too much guesswork has already been published about Palestine, both ancient and modern. One must try to be starkly realistic, following the good example of the Royal Commission. However, the fact that in October 1933 my family and I had to flee from the vicinity of the Damascus Gate in Jerusalem upon seeing and hearing the exchange of shots between British soldiers and natives still gives us memories that aid a vivid appreciation of what is going on. The press every now and then heralds more Conflict in the Land of Peace (this being the title of a recent pamphlet by a Palestinian Arab). Most recently (January, 1938), J.L. Starkey, the well-known archaeologist...
